Cover: Simply Complex

The cover art might look like a "regular" rowing photo, but it portrays more than that. It represents collaboration, teamwork, communication and lifelong bonds that are created through rowing. Kathleen was in Philadelphia training for two weeks with Vesper Boat Club. She was a stranger to all of us, but after two weeks of training with us, we created a bond that was initiated through a common goal, common purpose and a common mentality. Rowing brings people together in a way that connects people for life. When you're working in a team boat with someone towards a common goal, everything else becomes irrelevant. It's almost as if life gets put on hold while you're out there on the water.

HEAD OF THE SCHUYLKILL REGATTA

EST. 1970 • PHILADELPHIA

IT IS A GREAT PLEASURE TO WELCOME competitors back to Philadelphia for the 51st Anniversary of the Head of the Schuylkill Regatta. This year, the regatta is being held in memory and celebration of Ted A. Nash: rower, coach and friend of countless rowers on Boathouse Row and around the world. As we came up against the decision to hold the 2021 HOSR under challenging circumstances, we mirrored Ted's philosophy as described by the many rowers and friends he impacted and asked, "What CAN we do?"

Our board of directors and regatta organizing committee have worked countless hours to ensure that the 2021 regatta is held — in person — on the iconic Schuylkill River despite the challenges of the past eighteen months. Now, more than ever, we are determined to celebrate our sport and the future of rowing by demonstrating resilience, creativity and flexibility.

In planning for this year, we paused to reflect upon so many things, especially our history, our growth and our commitment to our competitors, spectators, partners, and the City of Philadelphia. Some of you come to compete in the birthplace of American rowing, others return each year for the beauty of the Schuylkill in autumn, some to reunite with former teammates, and more for the competition and the challenge of the course. All, however, cognizant or not, become an important part of the tradition of one of the most iconic head races in the country.

Our 2021 program book, in typical fashion, takes a look at some of the things that are going on under the radar, like the story written by Andrea Pampaloni about local women who were pioneers in the 'manly' sport of rowing, and the article by Rick Stehlik, who is passionate about preserving and making available the memorabilia and artifacts of the legends and stories of Boathouse Row. Did we hear the word 'museum?' Dotty Brown's story about the renovation of Penn's boathouse brings to light the fact that we tend to take 150+ year old boathouses for granted. Few realize the efforts and costs to keep them safe and functioning. This year award winning editorial cartoonist Signe Wilkinson features our outstanding volunteer, Alex Cook who brings his sense of humor along with his ability to do 'just about anything' to not only the regatta, but also University Barge Club, our host club. The story about Philadelphia City Rowing assures us that after ten successful years, their future looks bright but needs the continued support of their friends on Boathouse Row. Merrill Hilf, as always, makes us smile...her story strikes a chord with how the pandemic affected her personally, and all of us in different ways. Last, but far from least, our partnership with the Fairmount Park Conservancy is just beginning; we are thrilled to give all of you a glimpse of who they are and what they do.

2021 has proven to be quite a year; regattas, teams and clubs have balanced a return to rowing while keeping their communities safe, and our local rowing community continues to recover from historic flooding. For the first time, regattas put real meaning in the phrase "we are in this together." We thank our friends who heeded our 'call to action' and helped us form important new partnerships and find creative ways to reach more people and grow our community.

The Regatta looks different this year, stripped down to our core priorities - the health and safety of our competitors, coaches and volunteers, and the provision of a fair and competitive race. Though we will miss the families and friends lining the banks of the Schuylkill and the aromas of the grills, our resources are poured into the competitor, truly living up to our reputation as "a racer's race."

More than ever, we appreciate our sponsors and our partners for their continued support as we all work to turn the challenges of the times into opportunities. I must also express sincere gratitude to our Board of Directors who truly believe the HOSR is more than just a regatta and are committed to making a difference, no matter what the obstacles. Together - WE THANK YOU - for showing up, giving your very best, enjoying this experience with your rowing family, and beginning the next 50 years of the HOSR, Philadelphia's Fall Festival of Rowing.

With gratitude,

Jennifer Wesson

Dear Friends,

It is my pleasure to welcome the thousands of competitors, coaches, family and friends to Philadelphia for the 51st annual Head of the Schuylkill Regatta. I always look forward to the last weekend in October and Philadelphia's 'fall festival of rowing.'

Now, more than ever, Philadelphia remains America's destination city for competitive rowing, hosting more regattas each year than any other racing venue in the United States. Launched in 1970, the Head of the Schuylkill is the city's largest regatta, with more than 9,000 competitors. Known as a "racer's race," there are many long-term and friendly rivalries among high schools, colleges, masters and rowing clubs that visit from across the country and around the world. Philadelphia is also home to some wonderful high performance training programs as witnessed by the number of 2020 Olympians who trained here. There is a wonderful story in this program book about Michele Sechser who competed in the Women's lightweight double in Tokyo this past summer.

With great pride I have watched the growth of the regatta, on and off the water. I am so very proud that they have become more than a regatta by working year round to reach out to the greater community and partner with the city, parks, schools, neighborhoods, local artists and musicians. It is a true Philadelphia event! The regatta organizing committee has worked tirelessly to overcome the challenges of the past year and to ensure that the 2021 regatta is safe, competitive and fun. And the generous support of corporate sponsors, partners, in-kind contributors and individual donors is very much appreciated.

While you are here we hope you will make time to visit our cultural attractions, historic landmarks, and enjoy the warm hospitality of our outstanding restaurants. For masters rowers with families, for 20- and 30-somethings, for high school and college crews—there are numerous "off the water" attractions for everyone. Philadelphia and Philadelphians welcome you.

My best wishes for an enjoyable—and winning—experience.

Sincerely,

Welcome,

As Commissioner of the Philadelphia Department of Parks and Recreation, I feel so fortunate to again welcome competitors, their coaches, their friends and families to Fairmount Park for the Head of the Schuylkill Regatta.

This has been a challenging time for all of us, and we congratulate the Regatta board of directors and organizing committee for their countless hours of work on behalf of the entire river community while at the same time working to produce a safe and successful event. This year, once again, we will all have the chance to appreciate Fairmount Park in all its glory. As the largest urban park system in the world, the Park is never more spectacular than it is this time of year. And, for 51 years, the green, gold, red, orange, yellow and purple foliage has provided a perfect backdrop for the more than 9,000 athletes who compete on the challenging 2.5-mile headrace course...and will be able to do so again this year.

The Schuylkill River has a long and storied history in Fairmount Park. As the Park's steward, the Department of Parks and Recreation is dedicated to providing competitors and coaches with a first class racing venue and an experience they will long remember. And, as many of you know, in addition to a hurricane cleanup following Hurricane Ida, we are preparing for the second half of the very important, and much needed, dredging project. Our top priority, as always, is to ensure the river is safe for all recreational users and the many regattas for which Philadelphia is famous.

We thank the Regatta for their efforts to showcase the Park, the River and the City to all of their supporters. We especially thank them for their support of the dredging project, their ongoing efforts to keep our park litter-free by implementing numerous 'clean up days' with their more than 350 volunteers and for their efforts to reach out to...and include... the river communities. Our special thanks to the Regatta's sponsors, in-kind contributors, donors, and partners for their support, especially this year. We all know that it really does take a village!

While you're in Philadelphia, we hope you will take time to explore the historic landmarks and statues along the racecourse and enjoy Philadelphia during this glorious season. We thank all of you for your commitment to rowing and the greater rowing community...this past year has taught us the importance of working together to overcome untold challenges and build a better future. Enjoy the weekend!

Sincerely,

Ted A. Nash: A Rowing Life

By Alan Robinson

THIS YEAR'S 51ST HEAD of the Schuylkill Regatta is dedicated to a life-changing force in many rowers' lives and a game-changing force in our sport. Ted A. Nash, a rower, Olympian, coach, and revered mentor and friend within the Philadelphia and American rowing communities passed away this summer, at the age of 88. From the day he began rowing as a college freshman at Boston University until he took his final stroke on the Schuylkill and offered still one more word of advice and encouragement, it can safely be said that no one loved rowing and rowers more than Ted Nash. His contributions to American rowing and the lives of its rowers extend far beyond the Schuylkill River and Boathouse Row.

A few facts for those who may be encountering the Ted Nash story for the first time. As a founding member of the Lake Washington Rowing Club in Seattle, he and his boatmates represented the United States at the 1960 and 1964 Olympic Games, winning a gold and then a bronze medal in the four without coxswain. Coaching at the University of Pennsylvania from 1964 until 1983, first as freshmen and then varsity heavyweights coach, Ted's crews were perennial powers in collegiate rowing, winning Eastern Sprints and Intercollegiate Rowing Association championships. From 1984 until well into the 2000's his coaching turned Penn AC into the magnet club for male and female rowers hoping to represent the United States in international competition in pairs and fours. During his time at Penn and Penn Athletic Club, small boat crews he coached qualified for and competed in nine Olympic Games. In addition, he assisted national team coach Mike Teti in coaching the 2004 Mens Heavyweight 8 that won the United States' first gold medal in that event since the storied 1964 Vesper Boat Club crew. Ted and Philadelphia Girls Rowing Club's Joanne Iverson were two of the three founders of the National Womens Rowing Association in 1966 after the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen (there was no USRowing at the time) refused to add races for women rowers to their events. Returning to competitive rowing in his 70s, Ted raced his last race in 2018, at the age of 85.

Ted was intense as a rower and as a coach. He was passionate. He trained hard. He rowed hard. He coached hard. He pushed his rowers to their limits and beyond. Penn AC rower Renee Hykel Cuddy, an Olympian and World's silver and bronze medalist in the womens lightweight double, recalls Ted pushing her to accept working to achieve the physically impossible. Rick Crooker, stroke of the 1967-68 undefeated, unheaded Penn freshmen heavyweight crew, spoke of a workout where Ted instructed the crew to row a starting 500m piece at an unheard of 50 strokes per minute. As their boat approached the end of the piece, Ted, with his booming, on-water voice, called out, "keep going!" They were dumbfounded, but they did. Afterwards, reflecting on how they had survived that test, Rick said the crew knew then that they could match and exceed the challenge made by any other crew. And, when Harvard, Penn crews' great competitor, made their move, they did.

Ted did not accept the status quo. Recruiting high school rowers to attend a university was not something that was done in the early 1960s. Coaches built their teams from the relatively few experienced prep school and high school rowers who matriculated and walk-ons. With that formula, Penn, coached by Joe Burk, had some great crews, including the 1955 Henley Grand Challenge Cup winning 8, and other crews with limited success. Coming to Penn as a freshman coach in late 1964, Ted changed that. In addition to recruiting some of the best prep and high school rowers, Ted sent letters to high school guidance counselors and coaches throughout the country, looking for tall student-athletes who might want to attend a leading university, try a new sport and maybe become an Olympian. And he succeeded. Luther Jones' Blackfoot, Idaho track coach received such a letter. Luther had never seen a racing shell before, but he said to himself, "what do I have to lose." He applied, was accepted and matriculated as a Penn freshman in September 1967. Twelve months later, after being elected captain and rowing 7-seat behind Rick Crooker in the freshman championship 8, Luther along with two other Penn undergraduates and two Penn graduates and coached by Ted, won the US Olympic Trials in the four with cox. They finished 5th in the 1968 Olympics, a second out of a bronze medal. (Freshman stern pair mate Crooker was a member of the Canadian Olympic 8 that same year.) From Blackfoot to Philadelphia to Mexico City in one year – an oarsman by Nash. Ted built Penn into a perennial powerhouse with a record of cup race, Eastern Sprints and IRA victories.

Penn AC had a proud racing history. John Kelly, three-time Olympic gold medalist in the 1920s, rowed for Penn AC. The 1930 Penn AC "Big Eight" was world champion. But the club's glory days were behind them. Coaching there after he left Penn, from the 1980s into the 2000s, Ted built a championship program modeled on the great Lake Washington Rowing Club program he had been a part of as a rower. Penn AC soon became the magnet for rowers with national and international competition aspirations, but who had not been invited to join or did not stay with the national team program. Coming to Philadelphia from around the country to row for Ted at Penn AC, male and female rowers became members of a program producing numerous national and world champions and Olympians.

Ted's enthusiasm about rowing and everything else was boundless, as was his support to rowers at all levels. As the elite rowing coach at Penn AC, Ted would be just as excited about the club's high school novice four winning a Schuylkill Navy Regatta race as one of his crews winning the US nationals. And he let the high school kids know it. High school rowers mingled with and learned from Olympians on a daily basis. After Penn, Ted always had a day job. Coaching elite rowers and Olympians at Penn AC was an unpaid position.

As a rower and a coach, Ted always had the biggest tool box and portable parts closet. He could fix anything. And if neither he nor anyone else had the part, he would fabricate a workaround. He did this not just for the crews he was coaching, but for any coach or rower who needed the help. And if he saw a rower from anywhere who might benefit from his advice, he was right there to give it.

US Olympic Mens Crew Head Coach Mike Teti calls Ted "American rowing's only Superhero." He looked the part, he talked the part, he walked the part.

Ted's late in life good friend and rowing partner Red Sargent tells of a transcendent row with Ted in the 2017 HOCR. "Perhaps because we would be racing a four and sweep boats and 4s were closest to his heart, Ted put more emotional energy than ever into preparing for and rowing that race. We practiced that boat for months on the Schuylkill, often with Ted's wife Jan in the cox seat. Ted was in his glory throughout the race and for hours after. Calling for tens, recounting how well our cox steered the turns..." A week before his 85th birthday - pure Ted.

Ted had a generosity of spirit and a joy that he shared with everyone and anyone. He cared deeply about those he knew well, and others who he knew less well, but shared in his love for our sport. After a few words with Ted, you were ready to slay whatever dragon you were facing or to simply have a great day.

But perhaps most lastingly, Ted was a mentor. In the words of John Chatzky, who coxed for Ted at Penn: "He taught me so many important things about rowing but, much more importantly, he taught me lessons about life. He taught me you need to be passionate about your pursuits, and that one could not be truly happy or truly fulfilled in one's life unless you were passionate about something...He taught me about dedication, determination, discipline and excellence. He also taught me about commitment and the need to challenge yourself and to challenge others around you to be better. He suggested that to achieve great things we needed to take great risks, that it was OK to fail and be imperfect, and that we failed only when we failed to push ourselves and we only got better when we confronted our failures."

Speaking for those of us who rowed for Ted at Penn, and speaking figuratively for the many others who rowed for Ted elsewhere or who otherwise came to know him, I wish to say to Ted, the words he said to us, "God bless you. Go fast. Don't forget to have some fun. Beat Harvard!"

All are welcome to an open house at Penn AC in celebration of Coach Ted Nash. Stop in for a beer and a bite to eat in the Ted Nash Room (and outside on the deck) between 2-6 pm. Ted was an icon at Penn AC, a longtime supporter of the club and the head coach of its high performance program for many years. He continued to row out of the boathouse well into his 80s and his presence is greatly missed.

Penn AC is "Soaring to New Heights" as they embark on a Capital Project that will provide a world class training facility for National Team and Olympic hopefuls as well as the needed space to expand their member programs to create a more diverse, inclusive rowing community. This project will continue the legacy that Ted started at Penn AC.

Captain Cook: HOS Regatta Volunteer of the Year

By Signe Wilkinson

"Alex Cook's rowing is like fine wine. It keeps getting better with age."

-Bob Johnson, UPenn crew member with Alex

THIS YEAR'S HEAD OF THE SCHUYLKILL "Volunteer of the Year" has been actively rowing since he was thrown into a boat at Connecticut's Salisbury School. He hasn't stopped rowing since.

The University of Pennsylvania's legendary crew coach, the late Ted Nash, managed to recruit Alexander Trowbridge Cook as a last minute addition to his class of '77 varsity heavyweight team. Fellow crew member Hanley Bodek recalled, "Nash knew that Alex was a stallion."

He was a stallion with a devilish sense of humor. Alas, the high standards of the HOS Program editor do not allow us to share the most piquant examples. However, we can report that once on a 3-mile full pressure piece, when Nash thought the boat wasn't going fast enough, he pointedly asked Alex, "What pressure are you at?" According to Bodek (who was in the boat where it happened), Alex jokingly muttered, "It's a long piece. It's important to conserve your energy!"

Alex was willing to do anything on the water. Bodek remembers that, "Once up river in an eight we let the boat run with our blades at a slight angle. Alex, who liked to, let's say, 'experiment with technique', flipped his blade over backwards. It caught the water and flipped Alex out of the boat."

At a fancy wedding next to a lake in New Hampshire, Alex left the party, hopped onto a wind-surfer, sailed around the lake and returned to the party without a drop on his dress clothes. His first business was selling windsurfers before heading on to work for Manufacturers Hanover Bank in NYC.

Tiring of banking, Alex moved to Philadelphia and began rehabbing abandoned houses. His properties were so frequently broken into that he became a certified electrician and founded "The Alarmist Security Systems," a prominent, full-service fire protection and security inspections company in the Philly region.

After many years on the job, Alex continues serving as the "Captain" of University Barge Club. Captain Cook wrangles boats, looks after launches, and has been a first responder after every flood including September's devastating Hurricane Ida where the water was up to the windows at the FRONT of the boathouse. Former UBC President Howard Greenberg says, "You could not have a better Captain. Whatever you asked of Alex got done, without drama and delay. Alex has been and is a significant asset to UBC."

The same goes for his help before and throughout the Head of the Schuylkill Regatta where, according to HOS Executive Director Jen Wesson, he affably "welcomes our out-of-town guests, assists in finding them boats, entertains them with tours, stories and a full cooler. He also works long shifts as a dock master while managing to organize crews. Plus he races multiple times (or shall I say 'collects handfuls of medals!') all through the weekend."

When asked how many races Alex has won over the years, his friend Hanley paused and said, "A lot!"

Jen Wesson sums it up, "His unwavering positivity keeps us laughing through even the most challenging times. Every regatta and club needs an Alex Cook! Thanks, Captain Cook."

Signe Wilkinson is a member of University Barge Club.

Every Work of Art Has a Story

by Solveig Imsdahl

MOST ROWING PHOTOS LOOK SIMILAR and capture the exact same elements: water, boats, oars, and rowers. So why do we look at rowing pictures as if they are something special? What makes one photo stand out from the next?

For me, it's the story and the feelings that accompany it. Every photo has a story. And every story is different, personal, and unique.

This photo was captured on the Schuylkill River by Ahsan Iqbal during the Independence Day Regatta 2021. It's a composite crew of Kathleen and Solveig, who were complete strangers two weeks before this race. Kathleen was training in Utah, had already qualified for Uganda's women's single and was in her final weeks of preparation for the Tokyo Olympics. Solveig was training at Vesper Boat Club in Philadelphia. So why would these two rowers with completely different backgrounds, journeys and futures row together?

Because they were searching for the same thing: the perfect stroke.

It does not matter who we are, where we come from, how old we are, what we believe in, why we are here or when we started rowing. These questions become irrelevant as soon as we shove off the dock. It's as if we are shoving away from reality to focus on one single, common goal: rowing.

It's completely simple, yet simply complex.

Through rowing, we can put any individual differences aside. Every single rower in the boat becomes an essential and equal part of the team to the extent that our past achievements as well as past struggles get erased. Even language can become secondary when we are able to communicate through boat-feel. Together, we are humbly reminded that no matter how much experience we have or how many hours we have spent trying to achieve perfection, we will always be students of the sport.

Through rowing, we can enter another state of mind. It can be meditative, mindful, and magical. When we are in the boat, we have crossed into a different world—at first intriguing and complex. But with a willingness to learn, we can realize how simple rowing is, once we are no longer the ones making it complicated. The repetitive motion of the stroke helps create a pattern that allows us to constantly reset and focus our minds. The process is complex enough to engage our mind, yet simple enough to allow us to relax our body. The boat will keep us honest by providing immediate feedback—if we are willing to accept it. Rowing can easily become a passion that will let us lose track of time. And the most captivating part of it happens when we are willing to submit ourselves to the system and acknowledge that we will never fully understand the complexity of it. That's when we are rewarded with moments. Moments when we realize that we can gain more speed by relaxing and letting the system do the work. Moments where we discover that speed has less to do with pure strength and more to do with persistence, patience, and precision. Moments when we learn subtle things like relaxing our hands. Moments that are usually unpredictable, indescribable, and unexpected, because we are not in control of when or how they happen.

Through rowing, we can create bonds that last a lifetime. Most of the time we row with friends or teammates, but sometimes we end up in a boat with someone new. Regardless of the journey that took place to create a certain line-up, the potential to create an intense bond with our teammates remains. It is as if we agree to embark on an adventure together without knowing what we will encounter or where we will end up. But if there is mutual trust, respect, and open communication, we will be able to learn and explore this unknown world together. This common goal allows us to communicate without words, it allows us to teach but also learn, and it allows us to push each other through our mental and physical limits. Sharing and creating experiences with teammates is a powerful feeling, but it is really the unpredictability of the journey that keeps us coming back for more.

Solveig Imsdahl has been painting for over ten years and loves telling stories through her art. She has had her work featured and hung in multiple restaurants around Philadelphia and will continue to follow her passions, which include rowing, painting and music.

The Preservation of the History of Rowing

By Rick Stehlik, Malta Boat Club

ARE YOU AWARE OF JUST HOW MANY BOOKS and publications there are about rowing? It is in the thousands, covering every aspect of the sport, in every country. However, listings of these books or bibliographies are scattered amongst various sources.

Do you know that professional rowing was once the most dominant, and unfortunately one of the most corrupt sports in the US? It was also as well covered as a sport on social media of the day as the NFL is today.

Did you know in Philadelphia, many of the rowing clubs had additional social clubs near East Falls which were serviced by a trolley line that crossed the Schuylkill River at Strawberry Mansion Bridge? Two still exist today.

Dredging along the Schuylkill River is nothing new and has been a crisis every 15-20 years, defying a solution.

Did you know that there used to be a high school rowing program for blind students who successfully competed as a crew in regattas for many years?

Shells for many years were made out of laminated paper, and at one time were considered to be the best boats available. The idea and techniques were the precursor to today's high tech shells.

Organized women's competitive rowing existed in the 19th Century at the college level, and also in various other regattas.

DO YOU KNOW WHERE TO FIND INFORMATION ON ALL OF THE ABOVE? The simple answer today is the Internet, a wonderful tool, but not the full answer. Sometimes the really interesting answers are locked in a trophy, an obscure meeting minute, a person's memory, a building, or even a watch from the People's Regatta. But also, you have to know the question first.

In the United States, rowing has existed for over 200 years as a sport. As a result, a record of these activities exists in various forms, written and in artifacts, but in many cases these records have been lost. The rowing clubs in Philadelphia, for instance, all date to at least the early 1800s along with their parent organization, the Schuylkill Navy, founded in 1858. The Philadelphia clubs and other major rowing centers are, in many cases, the living museums of the History of Rowing. Artifacts, records, correspondence, etc., are scattered throughout the country, some in storage sheds. They are maintained by volunteers who are themselves the keepers of oral histories. But many of these stories are known best by an aging population and, along with the tangible artifacts, are being lost.

Yet despite all this, there is not a museum in the United States devoted to rowing, or a framework to manage the information and artifacts which exist. There is a Rowing Museum at Henley in England, and at one time there was one at Mystic Seaport, which regrettably lost its home. There was one for a while in Fairmount Park at one of the Park's historic houses. In the short term, preservation falls to smaller venues, but the challenging goal of establishing a permanent location remains.

So why is this important to address? Though rowing is enjoyed by thousands of people of all ages, many are new to the sport, and unaware of its roots. To some, its history is a dry and boring subject, often told by those reliving the good old days. However, one is amazed when folks come to the rowing clubs in Philadelphia, for instance, where they can see the history on display and hear the stories behind all of the artifacts. When past rowers visit, it is impressive how much of their lives have been defined by their rowing experience. Questions are often asked by family members about their relatives' rowing careers, or they present artifacts, and want to know their significance. Often rowers cannot remember what they had for breakfast, but every stroke of that favorite race many years ago is clear as a bell.

It is also fun to learn about the collection of "characters" - good and bad - who have defined the sport. Some of their stories are stranger than fiction. But ultimately, like all history, we learn from it and hopefully build upon its foundation. Many important artifacts have been lost forever, and some, such as the Philadelphia Gold Cup, saved only through pure luck. They are often works of art, and tangibly represent real people and experiences. It is disappointing to see so little of rowing covered by media today for major and minor competitions. Clearly in past years this was not the case. Maybe history will teach us how to improve this situation without disturbing the unique way in which we all interact.

Recently, Dotty Brown wrote a marvelous book about Boathouse Row, which chronicles the history, prominent personalities, and programs in Philadelphia. Pete Mallory's book, The Sport of Rowing, covers all facets of the history of the sport and is now available online at World Rowing. Bill Miller from the National Rowing Foundation has maintained a website with information on many aspects of rowing history and resources. But at the local level, individuals and clubs also work hard to maintain their histories.

There is certainly an interest in the preservation and documentation of rowing heritage, but it can seem overwhelming. Our own recent efforts to preserve the collections at Malta Boat Club have been enlightening to say the least, and are a case study in the challenges of preservation. For instance, we discovered that 50 years of our records had found their way to the Pennsylvania Historic Society in 1947 without our knowledge, and are now part of the overall collection there. Only by a search in 2015 did we come to identify this record gap in our history.

Here are some strategies which might be implemented to preserve this history and generate interest about the past and excitement for the future.

First, for all those interested in preservation you are not alone; there are many individuals who are willing to help with inquiries and questions. We are building a list of contacts in Philadelphia that can assist individuals or other organizations with questions. In Philadelphia, and in most major cities throughout the country, there are historic institutions, which often will take in and preserve collections of materials. For instance, in Philadelphia, there is the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, which houses collections for Philadelphia Girls Rowing Club, Malta Boat Club and Pennsylvania Barge Club. There is also the Independence Seaport Museum, which houses the collections for the Schuylkill Navy, Undine Barge Club, and Penn Athletic Club. These original documents can be accessed in person or through their websites.

But on a more individual basis, there are the clubs and rowing centers themselves. Each one is a unique venue showcasing the History of Rowing. They, through volunteer efforts on many levels, have saved many of their artifacts, but unfortunately sometimes items still disappear. Technology, as we all know, is constantly evolving. There are means now never available before to document and preserve electronically items such as minutes, correspondence, photographs, etc. But like all good documentation methodologies, they are only as good as the maintenance and accessibility of those records.

Certainly, there is nothing like going to a rowing club to see the magnificent trophies and actual wooden racing shells. The buildings themselves, though an extreme challenge to maintain, are designated Historic Landmarks and still exist after 160 years. However, the burden is heavy on the clubs and other school organizations to maintain their physical facilities and the historic items contained within either by preservation in place, or having them placed with organizations that specialize in such a mission. In a perfect world, one location that could take on this responsibility requires a significant investment and endowment.

What can be done now? First of all, and the simplest of all, don't throw out anything until you have considered its historic significance, and investigated how to preserve it if possible. There are people and institutions in Philadelphia and the country interested in saving history that can give you guidance. At Malta, for instance, we have established a library of rowing books, and we welcome additions and consideration of other general artifacts related to Boathouse Row.

Second, the effort should focus on creating a database that tracks where items and records are housed.

Third, build a list of local and national contacts and resources, and what sites on the Internet can assist with information.

Finally, rowing like all amateur sports, is competing for attention and funding. There are great volunteer efforts to preserve our history, but we should seek to create a managed process which is dedicated to this effort, and place it under one umbrella.

Rick began rowing in 1962 for Harriton High School. He went on to attend Carnegie Mellon as an undergrad and Wisconsin as a graduate student. He became a full time sculler, and in 1966 joined the Malta Boat Club where he competed at both the elite and masters levels. He served as Malta's coach for fifteen years and also as Club President. Now, retired after 45 years as a construction manager, he continues to actively support the operations and maintenance of the Club. More recently Rick has been involved in the preservation of historic archives for Malta and Boathouse Row.

My Year, A Pandemic Retrospective

By Merrill Hilf

AS I WRITE THIS, I'M STILL UNSURE what type of regatta the Head of the Schuylkill will be. A virtual component is planned, and an in-person regatta is scheduled. The only thing I can be sure of is that rowing will be involved; spectators, vendor tents, chuck wagons, not so much. I'm also sure that we will still be dealing with the issue of public health and safety, due to COVID-19, "Corona," "the Rona," or whatever you want to call it. By the time you read this, I hope the booster debates will be finalized, a vaccine for children under the age of 12 will be available, and the Delta variant will be bored with human hosts. That's me being hopeful, even dare I say, optimistic, after almost a year and a half of feeling completely used up.

The pandemic brought with it many new phrases and terms. I never thought of myself as an "essential" healthcare worker, or a "front line provider." Telehealth became the norm for many primary care providers, post-op follow up visits, and psychological therapy. I have patients that have never seen their primary care provider, in person. Home health providers, such as physical therapists like myself, never stopped treating people in their homes. I was there in person, but most have never seen my face. I have been in homes where Covid snuck in, and took up residence in everyone that lived there, from toddlers to grandparents. Frequently, parents and grandparents were the ones who ended up hospitalized, and I was there to treat those that made it home. Some never did. Some went from being full time workers, or full time caregivers to being out of breath if they walked across a room.

"Caregiver fatigue" is one of my favorite phrases, since it is very accurate. It's not like I ever stopped caring, but after a while self preservation takes over, and it's easier to just turn off the compassion zone in my brain, and numb through another day. Every healthcare provider is short staffed, just like school bus drivers, substitute teachers, and restaurant workers. People who have been working from home are being told to get out of their sweatpants, put on a mask, and return to their offices. Lots of anxiety and complaining has ensued.

Whenever I've reached my saturation point with the constant masking, hand sanitizing, and daily delousing, I try to think about my grandfather. In the year 1918, my grandfather turned 18 in May, the "Spanish" flu epidemic was raging in major cities, the U.S. was fighting in World War I, and my grandfather became eligible for the draft. To avoid being drafted into the Army, which almost certainly meant the infantry, and being shipped off to war, young men could enlist in the Shipping Board. The Shipping Board was kind of like the minor league of the Navy, and men could serve one year and fulfill their service commitment. The training was similar to naval training, with more of a focus on supply fulfillment versus combat. My grandfather enlisted in the Shipping Board, left Manhattan, and was stationed in Boston on a ship. By the fall of 1918, the flu was ravaging at nearby Fort Devens, and hundreds of Army privates were dying, along with civilians, living in Boston. There was no PPE, no hospital beds, no social distancing, no vaccine, and no antibiotics, let alone antiviral medication (or horse dewormer). It was decided that the Shipping Board would bury the bodies of the dead from Fort Devens, at sea, since as part of their training they would ship out for weeks at a time. After several trips at sea, with burial duty, and training, my grandfather, and several of his fellow crewmen began to get the flu.

By November, my grandfather was due to ship out again, and he thought for sure that he would die of the flu at sea. My grandfather contacted his father via telegram, letting him know that he had the flu, and my great grandfather in turn sent a telegram stating he should request leave, and return to New York City, under the pretense that his mother was dying (easily believable since people were dying of the flu). My grandfather was granted leave, but was in such a rush to catch a train in Boston, he never received his official papers. Family legend has it that he bought six Boston cream donuts, and a train ticket. After arriving in New York City, he made it home, and collapsed with a 104 degree fever. My great grandfather was a pharmacist, and treated his son with whatever he had to reduce his fever, and after four to five days, amazingly, his fever broke. Shortly thereafter, the war ended, and so did my grandfather's military career.

Of course, none of this has anything whatsoever to do with the Head of the Schuylkill Regatta, except for my realization that in 2021 we have it pretty easy in comparison. Sure, Covid-19 has impacted the Philadelphia rowing community, and rowing all over the world. After a year of not being able to row, then slowly reopening boathouses while observing CDC and USRowing guidelines, to finally being able to row more regularly and safely, the HOSR would represent a bit of a return to normalcy. However, there was nothing normal about Tropical Storm Ida, and the subsequent floodwaters of the Schuylkill River, which left behind a muddy path of destruction. Still, I am grateful that our boathouse still stands, that mud washes off, and we still have some boats to row. We are a resilient, if not obsessive, community, and I have hope that we will overcome adversity in the form of Mother Nature. I am also hopeful that next year I will be able to write more about rowing, and less about community health, and survival.

Be safe, be smart, and enjoy anytime that you get to row.

Head of the Schuylkill - Virtual

Although we were unable to hold the Head of the Schuylkill Regatta in Philadelphia in 2020, we celebrated our 50th anniversary, our sport, and the future with the rowing community - virtually. You turned out to compete in spite of the challenges. It was truly inspiring to see you meet your goals, row with family members, race in a single for the first time, keep those records of consecutive HOSRs...and help to raise over $8,000 for Philadelphia City Rowing (PCR), empowering youth through the sport of rowing.

Thanks to your tremendous feedback, the HOSR is holding a virtual component again in 2021, connecting competitors across the country and around the world to one another and the Schuylkill!

Individuals and/or teams must row 4,150m on their rowing machine or favorite body of water any time between October 24th and October 31st and self-submit their scores. Medals will be awarded for on water and on land subcategories. Results will be posted on www.hosr.org. Proceeds will again be dedicated to PCR. Even though you can't be with us in Philadelphia, we see you and thank you for your support!

Annual Awards & Trophies – Legacies of the Schuylkill River

Point Trophies: Presented annually to the college, high school, masters and open categories that have the greatest number of points at the end of racing, demonstrating exceptional group skills. The winners are determined by the number of points compiled determined by a preset formula. The Philadelphia Inquirer sponsors the Masters Points Trophy Award, to the teams whose masters rowers accumulate the most points during the two-full days of competition.

The John Hartigan Trophy

Awarded to the two winning high school JV and lower school crews for both men and women. John Hartigan's 50+ years of rowing/coxing, despite having been born with spina bifida, (a failure of the spine or spinal cord to properly form) are notable: as an Olympian, World Champion, teammate, mentor, friend and inspiration to many. His story, and passion, will continue to inspire others, and he will always be an important part of Philadelphia's largest and most inclusive regatta thanks to the Friends of John Hartigan.

Michael O'Gorman Trophies

Awarded to the mens and womens high school eights (frosh/novice) in memory of legendary coxswain and coach Michael O'Gorman. Michael, a US National Team member and champion, was equally successful at coaching in the Philadelphia and Chicago rowing communities, devoting his energy to providing youth access to rowing.

The Mayor's Cup – In honor of Philadelphia's Mayor James Kenney and all mayors to follow, as thanks for prioritizing youth and our beautiful parks, and for supporting the rowing community. – Mens and Womens High School Varsity Eights

The John F. Timoney Memorial Race – Friends of the former Philadelphia police commissioner, a local legend on and off the water, have dedicated an award in his name to help his spirit and legacy live on. – Mens Masters Doubles (50-59)

McArdle Family Races

The McArdle Family Cup is awarded annually to the winner of the Men's High School Varsity Double, and the Daniel J.S. McArdle Cup is awarded annually to the winner of the Men's High School Junior Varsity Double. Dan is a former competitive rower at Rutgers and senior rowing referee having served as the deputy chief referee of the Head of the Schuylkill Regatta for a few years. He is an active member of Undine Barge Club and occasionally can still be found competing in some races.

Jim Barker: Special medals are awarded each year to every competitor in the high school singles races in honor of Jim Barker, long time coach of The Haverford School. Jim is a legendary figure in the sport of rowing on Boathouse Row and beyond and is a member of the US Rowing Hall of Fame. Jim is also a board member of the Philadelphia Gold Challenge Cup Foundation.

Christopher I. Blackwall Race: Awarded annually to the winner of the womens masters eights and lightweight eights. Christopher was race director of the Head of the Schuylkill Regatta for more than three decades and is still working hard to make a difference on Boathouse Row and the sport of rowing.

Bob Brasler Memorial Race: Awarded annually by friends of Bob Brasler, a former board member of the HOSR, and an ‘uncoachable’ oarsman who sang better than he rowed. He began each row with his rendition of ‘Oh what a beautiful morning’ when he launched most mornings from University Barge Club.

Mitchell S. Budman Race: An annual award to honor Mitch Budman, long time treasurer and co-director of the HOSR and the driving force behind the growth and success of the regatta. His efforts on behalf of the entire local rowing community are legendary.

Joseph William Burk Memorial Race: Awarded annually in memory of a true rowing legend that left his mark on the greater rowing community, especially the varsity crews he coached at the University of Pennsylvania.

Charles P. Colgan Memorial Race: Awarded annually by the Colgan Family Foundation in memory of Charles ‘Chuck’ Colgan. Chuck was a champion rower, coach, referee, regatta organizer or whatever it took to further rowing in the U.S. He was the force of change for rowing in Philadelphia and started many rowing programs for women, inner-city youth and people with disabilities.

The Commodores Race: This race honors all who have served as a Commodore of the Schuylkill Navy since its founding in 1858. Including Bonnie Mueller, current Commodore, and all living past Commodores: Liz Bergen, Mike Bergen, Vince Dougherty, Clete Graham, Paul Horvat, John Hogan, Ed Lucas, Margaret Meigs, Stephen Orova, Don Schnorr, Joseph Sweeney, Edward ‘Ned’ Thomas, and Al Wachlin.

Todd B. Craun Memorial Race: An annual award to the winner of the womens championship eight and lightweight championship eight in memory of Todd, a long time oarsman who was an essential part of the bronze medal at the 2008 World Championships won by Vesper’s lightweight women’s quad.

The Fred Duhling Cup: A true legend on Boathouse Row, this annual award honors Fred Duhling, three-time member of the U.S. National Team. As a coach, he led rowers to national championships. Overcoming great personal tragedy, Fred is an inspiration and serves as a role model for others in the greater rowing community.

Sir Steven Redgrave Challenge: Open and collegiate single scullers will compete in The Redgrave Challenge. The world’s most outstanding rower of all time, former British rower Sir Steve Redgrave, serves as The Gold Cup Honorary Chairman. Redgrave won an incredible five gold medals in successive Olympic Games from 1984 to 2000, as well as a bronze medal. Today, Redgrave devotes his time to the support of rowing and sport globally, as well as philanthropy, through the Steve Redgrave Fund, which uses sport to bring about positive change in the lives of disadvantaged children.

The Sid Salomon Trophy: Malta Boat Club, in memory of Sidney Salomon, presents this annual award. He was the oldest competitive rower in the country at the time of his death at age 90, in 2004.

University Barge Club in honor of the Founders: This annual award honors three University Barge Club members who founded the HOSR in 1970; Lyman Perry, J. Pattison IV and the late Paul Betancourt.

Welcome to Fairmount Park!

SPANNING 2,050 ACRES, Fairmount Park is the largest park in Philadelphia.

In the late 19th century, the City of Philadelphia began to purchase land and properties around the Schuylkill River to create Fairmount Park in order to protect the City's water supply and provide the residents of Philadelphia with a place for outdoor activities. This was in keeping with William Penn's original vision for Philadelphia as a "green country town."

Today, Fairmount Park hugs the Schuylkill River and includes West Fairmount Park (1,400 acres) and East Fairmount Park (650 acres) with plenty of trails, natural areas, athletic fields, and historic structures to enjoy.

The Mercury Pavilion offers scenic views of the Schuylkill River, Fairmount Water Works, and Boathouse Row

Mount Pleasant Mansion is one of many historic mansions-turned-house museums that dot the Fairmount Park landscape. The Boxers' Trail connects Mount Pleasant and many other historic mansions of Fairmount Park to the Strawberry Mansion neighborhood.

Learn more and join us for upcoming hikes, trail runs, yoga, bird watching and more events in Fairmount Park! Visit myphillypark.org for more information.

Fairmount Park Conservancy is a non-profit whose mission is to bring parks to life. We improve and steward Philadelphia's parks, enhance their historic and cultural assets, and support the communities they serve. Michelle Sechser The Decision Moment

By Jen Whiting

AS A ROWER, you've probably explained the sport to your non-rowing friends with analogies of life lessons or symmetry. Maybe you've likened rowing to other challenging sports like mountain climbing or boxing. But one metaphor I'd not heard before was the one used by Michelle Sechser, an Olympian and nine-time National Team member, when she described training on the Schuylkill River: a pick-up basketball game.

"When I was training at Vesper," Sechser explains, "it was so fun to be out on the River. It can be really busy but it was good to be surrounded by so many people who were in their singles. We were all doing the same thing: trying to be better rowers." As Sechser recalls her training years in Philadelphia, she explains how the demands of pursuing a spot on the US National Team were offset by the community of rowers that she often found herself lining up with on the Schuylkill River. "On 'piece' days, coach would invite people from other clubs. What used to feel really restrictive began to feel like a pick-up basketball game."

Sechser competed as a lightweight in the women's double at the 2020 Olympics, finishing fifth, with Molly Reckford as her doubles partner. As is typical of lightweight rowing, the margins are slim. When all rowers are capped at the same body weight, the competition comes down to fractions of a second. The finishing times of the top five boats in the 2020 Olympic finals, for instance, were separated by exactly one second.

"When you're rowing as a lightweight," Sechser explains, "everything counts. Every ounce of length, every inch of arc as you square your blade, every movement coming into the finish. There's no room for waste in lightweight rowing. There's an urgency to it. You have to make every ounce of your body weight and every inch of your blade work count." Sechser goes on, describing rowing with Reckford, "I'm fairly short so I have to focus on maximizing my arc length. I have fairly good hip mobility so I can get the compression that lets me row a stroke that's long enough for Molly's 5' 10" frame."

This Olympian's compression, blade work, and hip mobility have been her focus since she began rowing as a teenager for Capital Crew in Folsom, California, where her sister had taken up rowing. "I didn't really do sports in high school," Sechser says, as I ask her about her early rowing days. "My older sister had joined the rowing team. The first time I sat on a starting line in the Novice 8+ I was 15. I had a good coach who had trained us hard. I was starting to see leg muscles, arm muscles. As I sat on that line I felt confidence and a surge of adrenaline. I was excited to execute everything I'd visualized about that race. I felt very alive."

Rowing, Sechser explains, brought a simplicity to her high school years. "This was the thing in my life as a teenager that was simple and straightforward: success, boat speed, self-betterment. Rowing was the experience that taught me that if you work hard, you get faster; if you're a good teammate, your team goes faster." She chuckles a bit as I ask her if she was always athletic. "I don't think anyone who knew me would have said, 'She'll be a good rower.' I was pretty un-athletic. I remember having a one mile warm-up run before practice. I couldn't do it, I was breathless. But, I really enjoyed how rewarding and validating hard work was."

Sechser's high school rowing career earned her an invitation—and eventual scholarship offer—to the University of Tulsa, rowing for coach Kevin Harris. After graduating, she stayed in Tulsa to pursue an MBA and was an assistant coach for two years. "I knew, that first year as an assistant coach, when I was coaching the girls in the varsity 4+ through seat races, that I wasn't done. I wasn't done rowing." In a move that wasn't surprising to her, Sechser skipped her MBA graduation to compete in the National Selection Regatta (NSR) in 2010. "I made it to the A final at NSRs that year. I didn't win but seeing how fast the top crews were really drew me in. I went back to Oklahoma—to the newly-opened training center in Oklahoma City—and trained and raced all summer." In 2011, Sechser made the PanAm team in the lightweight double and, for the first time, represented the United States in international competition. "The first time I slipped into a USA uni I knew I wanted to keep chasing this thing."

Sechser's early rowing days had prepared her for the pursuit of a National Team spot. "I think the experience I had at fifteen is not really that different from what I experience today in rowing. You have to be willing to do the slow grind, to accept delayed gratification as you work toward the excitement of the starting line."

Sechser slows her words here, dropping a few beats in her delivery. What had been rapid-fire sentences that were recounting her early rowing history take on a new pace, and I feel like she's just called a shift in the boat; even in her speaking she maintains the rhythm of a race plan. I wait for her words as the boat runs out underneath her story. "There's always a moment in a race when you have to decide if you're sticking to your goal or not. Are you going to claw back and fight? It's the Decision Moment." Sechser pauses again and I lean in.

"So many crews are prepared on race day, so many crews have put in the time it takes to prepare for racing. The question is, can your commitment to your goal withstand the lactic acid in your legs, the field walking away from you? You have to decide." Sechser weighs two things in her mind at this moment: "One, I know that victory will be worth it. And, two," she says, "is the awareness of all the hours of training and mental toughness that comes from that training have brought me. In that moment I think about the training, all the hard days when you open your training plan from your coach and the erg workouts make your jaw drop. You have to decide."

In 2014, as Sechser was three years into her pursuit of rowing at the highest level in the world, she was training in the lightweight double with Devery Karz. That spring, Sechser and Karz won the Trials that selected the boat that would represent the US that year. "You want to talk about a moment," Sechser says as she remembers the Trials final, "in that race, with 750 to go, we were down a length. Out of the corner of my eye I could see the stern tip of the boat ahead of us. They were pulling away. That was The Moment. I thought, 'Either this is how it ends or I can just go for it.'" Sechser chuckles just a bit as she lays out the move that Karz called for at the 750-meters-to-go mark, "Ready, Up!" This was the call to start their sprint, which typically came 400 meters later, with 350 meters left, but Karz wasn't waiting. "I was stroking, so I went as hard and high as I could. We started to move a bit on the other boat." From bow, Sechser heard another call, "Go again. Ready, Up!" Another step up in rate and they drew even. "When we drew even, we used that momentum to drive across the finish line." Karz and Sechser won the Trials race; it would be the first time that Sechser would be in the US lightweight double, representing the US internationally.

Sechser and Karz moved to Philadelphia to train on the Schuylkill, based out of Vesper Boat Club, with John Parker as their coach. "He had a handful of lightweights and we wanted to be in the hub of rowing. I felt being in Philadelphia could fill out other aspects of my rowing life. I felt very strongly that Philly would be a great fit: Vesper, the coach, the community, the other high-performance athletes trying to walk the same path." Sechser's first few weeks in Philadelphia were Oktoberfest, then Navy Day, then the Head of the Schuylkill Regatta. "I hadn't experienced anything like that," she says, of a typical autumn on Kelly Drive.

And here is where the pick-up basketball game analogy comes to form. Says Sechser, "The really exciting part was how many people were in Philly that I could compete against. We did pieces based on the gold medal standard percentage so we could train with so many other rowers. Racing against so many different people in different boat classes developed me as a racer. Everyone gets off the line differently, which made me learn to respond better. There is so much depth in Philly, it expanded the scope I was trying to beat."

As Sechser's career grew, so too, did the competition. After not making the lightweight double for the 2016 Olympics, she came back to Philly to train at Vesper and coach at St. Joseph's Prep. Sarah Trowbridge had begun coaching at Vesper and Sechser and Emily Schmeig paired up and won bronze at the World Championships in 2017. Says Sechser, "Philly made it so easy. I'd train on the river and then go to work as a coach. Watching the kids compete at Manny Flicks let me have those lightbulb moments, when you see your athlete take strokes that bend the oar. You see them feeling the suspension. At the heart of being a coach, you appreciate each moment that much more. It helps set you up as a rower, too... you understand both sides of the megaphone." Sechser keeps going earnestly, "And, I've never seen anyone who loves anything more than a St Joe's parent who loves St. Joe's Rowing."

During her years in Philly, Sechser worked for Joanne Iverson, an author and vanguard on Boathouse Row. "Meeting her was the ultimate experience on the Schuylkill. Listening to her life experience, stories of how she fought for women's rowing—how she entered once as a man just to be allowed to race—knowing this keystone woman, it really made me grateful for my time racing on the Schuylkill. It really is hallowed ground."

Sechser lets a moment pass. "There's nothing like it—rowing on the Schuylkill—anywhere else that I've experienced. You have this family. It's like a movie. You couldn't make it up."

Out of the Shadows and Into the Spotlight

PHILADELPHIA IS ENTRENCHED IN THE ANNALS of rowing, and there is no question that the City of Brotherly Love is a rowing mecca. Our rowing history is rich, and enduring waves of youth and collegiate rowers help ensure that this Philadelphia institution will carry on.

But there's a gap in the stories that tell our history, and it's a doozy!

Despite their indisputable contributions to rowing, women consistently have been underrepresented as contributors to the history and narrative of rowing. Certainly – though through no fault of their own – women are newer to the sport by about a century. Still, Philadelphia Girls Rowing Club was formed in 1938, more than eight decades ago! Surely the accomplishments of the many incredible women who have come and gone since then deserve celebrating.

The creation of the National Women's Rowing Association in the early 1960s marked more formal recognition of the mastery demonstrated by women rowers. This was epitomized in 1967 when the bold and independent young women from Philadelphia who comprised the Vichy Eight would become an inspiration to women rowers, past and present. Through sheer grit and determination they pulled together and found the resources that the male-dominated sport refused to provide to allow them the privilege of competing internationally.

Yet even today the exceptional achievements of women rowers are likely to be relegated to footnotes of rowing history rather than to take center stage. If you were to tour our historic boathouses you would have to look long and hard to find photos of these amazing athletes among the hundreds of pictures of their male counterparts. Tradition is important and absolutely should be preserved...but come on!!

In 2016 Dotty Brown started the conversation on women and other underrepresented groups of rowers in her book, Boathouse Row: Waves of Change in the Birthplace of American Rowing. Now this mantle has been taken up by Women of the Row.

Women of the Row (WOTR) is the brainchild of three women – Ellen Carver, Maura Kennedy and Jen Wesson – who share a passion for rowing and recognizing the contributions and accomplishments of the many women, past and present, who have been incredibly influential yet patently overlooked in the world of rowing.

What started as an informal idea quickly became the structure for Women of the Row. Interest was immediate – clearly WOTR filled a gaping void by providing a community for women to share their personal experiences. Many of these women were “firsts”, but, as Jen Wesson noted, “Their stories were not being told.” So, WOTR has undertaken the mission of memorializing the history and successes of women rowers in Philadelphia.

Here's a sneak peek at a couple of our amazing women:

Anita Sacco started her rowing career at Philadelphia Girls Rowing Club and was part of the renowned Vichy Eight in 1967. She was the first woman at Vesper Boat Club, where she found some of the men were welcoming, but others, not so much. Many of the older members did not like the idea of any female being in the facility, and they let her know it. She had to hang “back in the shadows” but “if you wanted to row you had to overlook that.” And forget about coaching! “I was totally on my own for two years,” she told us, “I had nothing.” And yet she persisted!

Then there's Isabel Bohn who started rowing in 1980 at the age of 42. While on a ski trip, she was approached by some fellow-Philadelphians to participate in an adaptive rowing program that was just starting. Never in her wildest dreams did Isabel, an amputee, think she would be out there among their rowers! She was hooked from the start and now, 41 year later, her contributions and impact have been nothing short of amazing. She was the first adaptive rower at the Dad Vail Regatta and at a World Rowing Championship, and remains active with Philadelphia Adaptive Rowing program as its Board Chairperson. However, her proudest achievement was helping to orchestrate the first Adaptive World Rowing Championship in 2002, which was followed by inclusion of rowing in the Paralympics in 2008. Is there any surprise that U.S. Rowing created the Isabel Bohn Award for Achievement in Adaptive Rowing in her honor?

These and other great women are woefully underrepresented contributors to our rowing history, an unfathomable oversight considering their accomplishments, the prestige they bring to Boathouse Row and the sport, and the shoulders they provided for all the women who came after. These women opened doors, provided access, exposed inequalities, changed the sport, and provided a network, sometimes unknowingly, that helped future generations to do what they love.

WOTR is ensuring "the future of the past" by capturing and preserving the stories of these amazing women rowers. The narratives they collect will be an important part of the

"her-story" of Philadelphia's rowing community and will serve as inspiration to future women rowers who, perhaps one day, will join the ranks of these exceptional women by persevering against inequality and adding their own chapter as future and proud Women of the Row.

Women of the Row

Women of the Row provides opportunities to connect with one another and raise awareness of the presence and gap of women in sports and establish a network of supportive female rowers. Their mission is to break down barriers between women and the historically male-dominated sports industry by connecting female-identifying rowers and paddlers along Philadelphia's historic and iconic Boathouse Row and providing a platform for female athletes by sharing women's untold experiences of the Row and creating stories of the future.

Philadelphia City Rowing: The Next Ten Years

By Caitlin Mance

IT'S BEEN JUST OVER A DECADE since the first Philadelphia City Rowing (PCR) crews raced at the Head of the Schuylkill Regatta. Our mission to empower Philadelphia public school students through the sport of rowing has remained constant, and over the last decade, PCR has grown steadily in numbers, speed, and towards our goal of creating a truly diverse and inclusive program that successfully allows ALL young people to thrive, including students of every race, socioeconomic status, and gender identity.

Throughout the last decade, we made strategic changes to enhance our impact, including adding a middle school program to engage students earlier in their development, integrating swim instruction into all our programs, and improving our support services by adding a certified guidance counselor to our staff to provide individualized oversight of student academics and post-graduation planning. Even with these enhancements, all of our programs are still offered at no cost to participants and families.

After a brief setback in 2020, we had record enrollment in our programs this fall and anticipate serving over 350 students in the 2021-22 academic year from more than 25 middle and 35 high schools across Philadelphia. This represents a 500% increase from where we started in 2011. Although 55% of our participants come from low-income households and 60% have two or more risk factors for drop-out, 100% of our seniors have graduated high school on time with plans to pursue their education or training. We are continuing to gain traction in the schools and communities most impacted by systemic marginalization and with the fewest resources, and demand is at record levels across all programs.

Though we'd love to share a rosy outlook for the future, our big ideas, and our long-term impact, the truth is that our future success hinges on our ability to drastically increase support from individuals across Philadelphia, corporate and foundation partners, and especially our fellow rowers. Operating safely during the ongoing pandemic requires more staff, more space, and more resources to address new challenges. We have more than outgrown our current boatyard at Lloyd Hall and our 4,000 square feet of rented indoor space in Brewerytown. Sadly, we are now having to turn students away due to a lack of funding, resources, and space.

Our growth to date occurred with a staff that only this summer grew from one to three full-time employees. Organizations doing similar work in New York and Boston have budgets nearly ten times PCR's, five times the staff, and access to state-of-the-art boathouse facilities. Furthermore, PCR's location at the end of Boathouse Row means we are most affected by the buildup of silt in the river and the costs and disruptions of dredging, which threaten to close the program down entirely next year.

As we look to the future and begin to pursue our goals of growing our programs from 350 to 600 students served annually and expanding the support services we offer to include things like improved transportation options and hot meals after practice - all while continuing to offer our programs at no cost to participants and families - our reality is simple: to provide an equitable rowing experience for young people in the School District of Philadelphia, we need to drastically increase our fundraising revenue and secure additional indoor space along Boathouse Row. Simply put, we need a renewed commitment from everyone who has supported us in the past, and we need your help accessing new investments from outside of this community.

Over the last 10 years, the support of this community and organizations like the Head of the Schuylkill Regatta have been instrumental to our success and for that, we are incredibly grateful. We know that amazing things can happen when the rowing community (near and far) pushes together towards a common goal, but we have one question for you... A diverse and passionate new generation of rowers is ready to get hands on. Will you help make it possible?

Penn's Boathouse: Something Old, A Lot That's New

By Dotty Brown

STARTING IN 1860, stone boathouses, both substantial and increasingly picturesque, began rising along the Schuylkill River. But in 1875, when rowers at the University of Pennsylvania finally stepped into their newly built boathouse, it set a higher bar for the neophyte Boathouse Row.

"The house is all that could be desired by the most exacting, containing all the conveniences and appliances necessary for a complete boat house, and for the comfort of the members," the University Magazine reported. "It has the largest boat room on the river and surpasses in its conveniences many of the houses, while in beauty of finish and symmetry of form it is unsurpassed."

That was then. Today, the College Boathouse at 11 Boathouse Row is in the process of again breaking new ground as shabby, outdated additions are demolished to create a state-of-the-art space for Penn's athletes. At the same time, it will preserve and restore some historical features so critical to maintaining the character of Boathouse Row.

"The building was in a terrible state of disrepair, with foundations cracking in the 1920 addition," said architect Andrew Donaldson-Evans, regional director of design for the EwingCole architectural firm and designer of the College rebuild. It had also fallen woefully behind both its collegiate rivals and other Boathouse Row clubs in terms of functional spaces for its crews and coaches, he said. "It needed a lot of love."

Penn's crews are rowing out of a tent on the river's west side until the project's completion next August.

A look at Penn's original boathouse, subsequent additions and its current ambitions tell a story bigger than that of one structure. It tells a story of the ways that Boathouse Row has evolved as it tried to keep pace with the technological changes that made crew shells ever sleeker and faster as well as the societal changes that brought women into what was once called a "manly sport" where women sat as passengers in "ladies boats," rowed upstream by their beaus.

The original College Boathouse structure was a narrow two-story brownstone building with just a single boat bay with a tiny wooden balcony above it facing the river. A signature element was an arched tripartite window, one on each side of the building. For the Row at that time, the second story offered an innovation— an elegant upstairs reception room with carved wooden beams in the era's popular Eastlake style. The room addressed members' growing desire to be more than a sporting club but also a social club – a place where they could enjoy their cigars and whisky and even bring dates (during certain hours on Sundays, anyway).

But almost as soon as it was built, the College Boathouse was becoming out of date.

Through the late 19th century, the clubs competed architecturally with each other even as they competed on the water. The Undine Barge Club – two houses upriver from Penn and designed by Frank Furness in 1882 – was the first to build a balcony facing what is now Kelly Drive. This feature allowed its prestigious members to look out on passersby and be seen by them as well. Undine also outdid Penn with a much larger boat bay that spanned the length and width of its building, using a modern tied truss system that supported its second floor without columns cluttering its boat room.

The Bachelors Barge Club's 1893 boathouse built an even bigger balcony facing the drive. And the imposing Fairmount Rowing Association's boathouse of 1904 – the last to be built on the Row—boasted sprawling balconies and three boat bays.

Penn waited until 1920 to make its first major change, adding a one-story addition on its south, down-river side with two boat bays to accommodate its burgeoning crew program and the longer eight-oared shells that had come into widespread use. A decade later, it topped part of that addition with a second story, which created space for an erg room. Its stuccoed walls created a new look for Boathouse Row's brick and stone structures.

Boathouse Row was then enjoying a particularly exciting era. In 1920, John B. Kelly Sr. won two gold Olympic medals – in the single scull and the double – and was hailed the greatest rower in the world. He won another gold in 1924 and then embarked on a mission to recruit high school kids to his club at that time, the Pennsylvania Athletic Club Rowing Association, to assure its continuing prowess. By 1930, PennAC's "Big Eight" was the fastest eight in the world. And while the University of Washington's eight represented the United States at the 1936 "Hitler Olympics," the rest of the oarsmen that sailed to Germany all hailed from Philadelphia.

In 1938, a new era began on the all-male Boathouse Row* that would shake its traditions and eventually its architecture. That year, a group of secretaries and clerks took hold of the Philadelphia Skating Club at 14 Boathouse Row and started the Philadelphia Girls Rowing Club (PGRC), the first competitive women's rowing organization in the country.

Nonetheless, it would take 30 years before any other club on the Row would begin to crack open their doors to women. In the late 1960s, recognizing that women's rowing would finally become an Olympic sport, John B. Kelly Jr. (brother to Grace Kelly) began recruiting and training women. He wanted his club, Vesper, to be in the vanguard.

After the 1973 passage of Title IX, which barred gender discrimination in educational programs, and the debut of women's rowing at the 1976 Montreal Olympics, the clubs of Boathouse Row began tackling the challenge of carving out space for women in their crowded 19th century buildings. All but two of the 11 clubs on the Row eventually went co-ed (the exceptions being the all-male Malta and PGRC.). Most cut off a chunk of their men's locker room to do so.

For its women, Penn in 1980 added a second stuccoed wing – this time on its northern, upriver side, giving women a locker room and one boat bay while the men had two. The men also largely occupied the historical part of the building. The women's side was "institutional, aluminum windows, concrete block, with less charm," said Donaldson-Evans. "It didn't feel balanced." Central to the current renovations, he said, was to correct the gender discrepancies. The interior of the 1980 addition will be gutted and totally revamped with new wood-clad windows, new showers, tiles, lighting and more.

The demolition and total reconstruction of the 1920 wing might leave some with the impression that Penn is doing a land-grab on the tightly packed Row, but the footprint of the building is not changing. However, its total interior square-footage will grow from 10,552 to 13,034 square feet through the second-floor infill addition which will house a large erg room that can be used for social events as well as the men's locker rooms. Other improvements will be a more welcoming entry into the 1875 part of the boathouse with a lofty "grand hall" on its second floor with space for a conference table, an update AV system for team debriefs and a lounge area. With ADA accessibility a huge problem for the Row, Penn will be installing an elevator.

As for its profile on the Row, said Donaldson-Evans, "it's a historically sensitive addition and renovation" that won the approval of Fairmount Park and the Philadelphia Historical Commission. He thinks that the changes will "not be noticeable," though people on the Drive may notice the loss of a large red oak tree that he said could not be saved. From the river, some may notice two new minimalist balconies and a wooden historical restoration in the center, echoing the long-gone 1875 original. Unlike the other houses, Penn has not had a riverside balcony for more than a century.
